One was printed to bid farewell to Chris Hani after his assassination, another from the Anti-Apartheid Movement demands that apartheid South Africa be isolated.

"The works are an expression of the creative human spirit that could rise above the oppressive laws of the time. The works are as important now as they were back then," Ramdhani said. Bizos said his wife was an artist and he had spent much time in galleries. The exhibition is part of a series of events held by Unisa to celebrate 20 years of democracy.

Next month, the exhibition moves to London and then to Glasgow for the Commonwealth Games.
