

Search for SA's township art

A GLOBAL hunt to recover South African artworks that played a pivotal role in the fight against apartheid is under way.

This drive has been initiated by the Ifa Lethu (our heritage) Foundation that arts and culture minister Pallo Jordan launched on Saturday.

The foundation seeks to recover, safeguard and make available the "township artwork" crafted during the '70s and the '80s – the time described as the darkest days during apartheid.

Many of these were recognised by the embassies and visitors to the country but eventually disappeared.
